MARKET COMMENT (BASED ON THE SICAV REFERENCE CURRENCY)

Emerging Markets were flat in USD terms in February, hiding significant dispersion below the surface. Overall, the index gained 0.3%. China posted significant outperformance on the month, with a return of over 11% in USD. By contrast, India was weak, falling -8%. Sector performances broadly followed the dominance of country exposure, with Consumer Discretionary lifted by Alibaba (+45%) and Energy lower reflecting weak oil prices. Macro instruments reflected a broad risk-off tone, with the US 10-year yield more than 30bps lower and oil prices falling almost 4%. In February, the fund slightly increased by 0.11%, underperforming its benchmark by 92bp. The MSCI Emerging TR Net USD increased by 1.03% (from 27.01.2025 to 28.02.2025). The fund records a positive YTD performance of 0.52%, underperforming its benchmark by 148bp. From an industry groups point of view, both allocation and selection effects penalised the relative performance. The stock picking in Energy (-42bp), Banks (-39bp) and Retailing (-28bp) was particularly unfavorable. In terms of allocation, the underexposure to Media & Entertainment (-34bp) and overweight in Software (-33bp) were detrimental. By contrast, the underweight in Semiconductors (63bp) was advantageous. By country, both allocation and selection effects detracted from relative performance. The stock picking in China (-128bp) and India (-49bp) was particularly unfavorable, partially offset by a supportive choice of stocks in Taiwan (87bp). In terms of allocation, the underweight in South Korea (29bp) was beneficiary but not enough to fully offset the negative impact of the underexposure to Indonesia (-26bp) and Thailand (-17bp). With a positive impact of 60bp, the underweight in Taiwan Semiconductor Manufacturing, was the top contributor to excess returns. With a negative contribution of -37bp, not holding Xiaomi in the portfolio, a Chinese corporation operating in the Technology industry, was the largest detractor.
