MANAGEMENT COMMENT BASED ON THE MAIN SHARE CLASS

After April's correction the main global equity markets enjoyed a strong month in May. Swiss stocks led the good performance with the SPI up 6.1% and the SMI up almost 7% for the month, bringing the yearly performance of the two indices close to 10% and 11% respectively - in line with the results for the U.S. (S&P500 +11.3%) and European (MSCI Europe +10.6%) markets. A moderate decrease in the inflation numbers, as well as the reduction in the oil price below the $80 threshold, marginally eased the pressure on central banks, helping fueling further the robust rally in share prices that started at the end of October 2023.

From a sector standpoint we observed the good performance of the most cyclical sectors, with Information Technology up almost 20% (recovering from the -10% in April), Consumer Discretionary and Financials (both with a monthly performance of +11%). Finally, it is worth mentioning the strong outperformance of large-caps, with the SPI Extra Index delivering less than half (3.3%) of the monthly performance of the SMI.

In May, the fund increased by 5.18%, underperforming its benchmark by 96bp. The Swiss Performance Index increased by 6.14%. The fund records a positive YTD performance of 6.79%, underperforming its benchmark by 296bp.

From an industry groups point of view, both allocation and selection effects detracted from relative performance. Our stock picking in Capital Goods (-25bp) and Financial Services (-16bp) was particularly costly. By contrast, the selection in Pharmaceuticals (14bp) was supportive. In terms of allocation, the overweight in Real Estate (-38bp), Banks (-24bp) and Telecommunication (-22bp) detracted the most. Conversely, the overexposure to Insurance (27bp) and underweight in Pharmaceuticals (16bp) and Food (14bp) was favorable.

With a positive impact of 25bp, the pharmaceutical company Lonza (not held in the portfolio), was the top contributor to excess returns. With a negative contribution of -24bp, the overexposure to Swiss Prime Site, a company operating in the Real Estate industry, was the largest detractor.
